What's The Difference Between a Rostered Player and a Practice Player?

Every year, we're asked about the difference between rostered players and practice players. If your player is selected as a practice player, there is absolutely no reason to be disappointed. Please read below!

Rostered Players - Rostered players have full access to the team. They will have a secure spot for all games and tournaments.

Practice Players - The difference between rostered players and practice players is minimal. The only distinction is that practice players are not guaranteed game opportunities.

Practice players receive the full developmental experience, including all 21 full-ice practices, mental performance coaching, professional team-building activities, team events, uniforms, and the same high level of coaching, instruction, and support from our coaching staff and program leadership.

Practice players are an integral part of our program and are valued members of the team. They train alongside their teammates, contribute to the team's culture and success, and receive the same commitment to their growth and development as every other player.
